
Title:  Notes ***

Author: Tarra Edels

The bulk of this book seems to be a mixture of scribbles, notes, and rants of a bored butchers daughter. The passages seem slightly sadistic and focused on the sounds certain animals make before her father Leroy bleeds them out for butchering. The passages, drawings go on and on, mixed with occasional notes on the business side of the butchering business. You seem to think that this book was intended to be a ledger book and the author was supposed to be a sort of clerk, but didnt do much but write about her own thoughts instead of doing her job.

Two Passages stick out to you as you page through the book.

"Father caught me chewing on raw meat again, tells me I can get sick. Who cares. It tastes good, the texture feels good between my teeth. Chewy and the taste stays for a long time. Its not like there is a shortage of raw meat around here, we always have too much. The stuff sits here and rots sometimes."

"I found a secret place. I feel safe there. Woods to the east there are whole catacombs and secret chambers. You could get lost down there, or hide something if you wanted to. No one would ever find it. The undead there are not much of anything, but the tombs there look like ancient kings or something. No gold though.

I checked. Im never going to get out of this damned bloody shop."
